GENERAL MILLS RECALLS FLOUR OVER POSSIBLE LINK TO E. COLI

General Mills on Tuesday issued a voluntary recall of about 10 million pounds of flour, saying it was working with health officials to investigate an outbreak of E. coli that had sickened 38 people in 20 states. The bacteria strain behind the outbreak has not been found in any of General Mills' Gold Medal, Wondra and Signature Kitchens flour or their manufacturing plant, the company said in a statement. Consumers have not contacted it directly to report any illnesses, Minneapolis-based company added. "Out of an abundance of caution, a voluntary recall is being made," General Mills said in a statement. REUTERS

US WARNS CITIZENS OF POSSIBLE TERRORIST ATTACKS IN EUROPE

2 The U.S. State Department warned Americans of the possible threat of terrorist attacks in Europe this summer, saying targets could include tourist sites, restaurants and large events such as the European Soccer Championship in France. "We are alerting U.S. citizens to the risk of potential terrorist attacks throughout Europe, targeting major events, tourist sites, restaurants, commercial centers and transportation," it said in a travel alert expiring Aug. 31. "The large number of tourists visiting Europe in the summer months will present greater targets for terrorists planning attacks in public locations, especially at large events." The travel alert noted that France will host the UEFA Euro 2106 soccer championship from June 10 to July 10. REUTERS

PENTAGON: TWO US SERVICE MEMBERS INJURED IN IRAQ, SYRIA

3 Two U.S. service members were injured over the weekend, one each in Iraq and Syria, a Pentagon spokesman said on Tuesday. "They were not on the front lines, they were not engaged in active combat, but they were hit in both cases by indirect fire and suffered injuries," Pentagon spokesman Captain Jeff Davis said. The United States has authorized 4,087 troops in Iraq and 300 in Syria. Since December, Iraqi forces trained by the U.S. military and backed by coalition air strikes have taken back territory from Islamic State, which seized swathes of Iraq and Syria in 2014. Davis did not say to which branch of the military the injured belonged, but added that they were carrying out advise and assist duties. REUTERS

Philly Zoo says it is safe from 'nightmare' of Harambe's death

Officials at the Philadelphia Zoo said they don't believe a situation like that which caused the death of Harambe could happen at their zoo.

SAM NEWHOUSE

The killing of an endangered gorilla after a 3-year-old boy entered its closure at the Cincinnati Zoo over the weekend has prompted outrage among animal rights activists.

Outside the Philadelphia Zoo on Tuesday — where five Western lowland gorillas reside in a more-than-10,000-square-foot area, and have steel pathways that allow them to travel over zoo visitors — some visitors said zookeepers acted appropriately to protect the child.

"Gorillas move very quickly. I think they should have used a tranquilizer gun, but they made a split-second decision," said Jack Norman, who was visiting the zoo from New Jersey.

"These are wild animals and if you let children near them, you need to have your I's dotted and your T's crossed," he said.

Others were outraged by the news of the Cincinnati Zoo killing Harambe, a 17-year-old silverback western lowland gorilla — a subspecies that is currently listed as "critically endangered" in the wild — to protect the boy.

"For them to take that action and kill that gorilla, which is going extinct?" asked Dubbiel "Midas" Sowell, 23. "It was completely inappropriate.

"It's the parent's fault. The responsibility [is] on the parent to not have your child fall into a 12-foot well," Sowell said, adding that Harambe — caught on tape cradling the boy in one arm before he was shot — might not have even hurt the boy: "It's instinctual for them to care for them."

But Philadelphia Zoo chief operating officer Andrew Baker, the former curator of primates, said that Harambe was "displaying" the child and could easily have hurt him.

"I think the child was a convenient prop for his display. Without meaning to harm the child, he was putting the child at very real risk," Baker said. "When he charged that moat, that was not about the child, that was about him displaying. They'll often grab whatever's convenient and drag that along for their display."

Gorillas at the Philly Zoo are primarily seen by visitors through thick glass, which allow views into their outdoors area or the smaller adjoining indoor cages. But there is a roughly 15-foot outdoor viewing point where a heavily meshed fence, a land area and a moat separate the public from the gorillas.

"I have a lot of confidence in our barrier. A kid is not going to be able to get through that," Baker said.

Baker praised the Cincinnati Zoo and said that given the risk to the child's life, they acted appropriately in shooting Harambe.

"This kind of situation, it goes beyond zoos into any environment where accidents can happen — it's kind of any leader's nightmare," Baker said. "Anything that delayed protection for that child was going to significantly increase the risk of serious injury or even death."

All zoo staff are drilled in various emergency situations, and while children are allowed to roam and explore the zoo, staff will quickly intervene if they notice a completely unattended child, he said.

"It's hard enough to understand our own motivations and those of other people," he said. "As soon as you start to try to interpret what's going through an animal's mind, that's challenging."

"I have a lot of confidence in our barrier. A kid is not going to be able to get through that."

Release of Porngate report delayed

The attorney generals's office does hocus-pocus with release of review regarding email scandal.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Days after Pennsylvania Attorney General Kathleen Kane's eighth press secretary in less than four years quit, the office announced — then abruptly canceled — the release of the much-vaunted "Porngate" investigation.

Kane's office announced Saturday that a news conference would be held Tuesday to release the results of former Maryland Attorney General Douglas Gansler's independent review of all emails found on the office's servers.

A reminder email went out Monday morning about the news conference, but around 2 p.m. that day, a follow-up email canceled the event, saying former Montgomery County DA Bruce Castor, recently hired as Kane's solicitor general, put the kibosh on the release.

"Solicitor General Castor determined the working draft report was not comprehensive, and that too many of the emails provided in support of the working draft report were redacted," said the press release, which does not mention Kane as having any involvement in the decisions related to this news conference.

Castor, who famously argued in February that disgraced entertainer Bill Cosby could not be prosecuted on decade-old sex assault charges because he had a secret nonprosecution agreement with Cosby's lawyer, took all responsibility for the miscommunication.

"The solicitor general erroneously believed the full, unredacted and comprehensive report he had asked to be finished by the end of May would be ready in time, and thus he directed the [attorney general's] press office to issue press advisories over the weekend announcing the news conference," the release continued.

Gansler, who says he has never personally looked at pornography, was hired by Kane in December to review all state emails and find any offensive content.

Kane's office said that Gansler's team couldn't meet Castor's "aggressive timetable."

"As it turned out, Gansler and BuckleySandler LLP, Gansler's law firm, were unable to comply with the aggressive timetable the solicitor general desired, and Solicitor General Castor saw no alternative apart from granting more time to the independent investigators to complete their comprehensive report," the attorney general's office said.

The findings will be released over the summer, according to the attorney general's office.

Kane, the first Democrat and female attorney general in state history, announced in February that she would not seek re-election. Democrat Josh Shapiro and Republican John Rafferty are seeking election to the office in November.

Whether the resignation of Kane's press secretary Chuck Ardo last week had anything to do with the release is unclear.

Ardo told the Inquirer he retired because he was "tired of explaining the inexplicable."

History of Porngate

Kane, who is scheduled to go on trial in August on criminal charges for leaking confidential information to the media to embarrass a rival prosecutor, has long claimed she is the victim of a conspiracy of "good ol' boys" who targeted her after she discovered pornographic, racist and offensive emails being swapped on state servers.

Several hundred pages of the emails were filed in court documents by Kane to prove her point, and she earned national notoriety after releasing them to the press. She also released to the media emails linked to the private account of former state Supreme Court justice Michael Eakin. Eakin retired after heavy criticism for the emails.

Justice Seamus McCaffery also previously left the bench after he was linked to the emails, which involved numerous top law enforcement officials.

Kane won't seek re-election, will be tried in court in August. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Police seek stepfather in beatings, sexual assault

A teen girl escaped the attack and was able to reach police.

A family member is wanted for attacking a 13-year-old girl and her mother in their Frankford home.

Police say the suspect — identified as 39-year-old Malik Bailey — sexually assaulted his stepdaughter and brutally beat her mother early Tuesday on the 1900 block of Pratt Street.

Police responded around 12:30 a.m. after the teen escaped the home and ran to a neighbor's house for help. The neighbors called 911.

The girl met responding officers and told them she had been sexually assaulted in her basement. Bailey allegedly "entered her bedroom where she was sleeping, pulled her from her bed, dragged her to the basement and sexually assaulted her," police said.

She told officers the suspect was still in the house when they arrived, but SWAT team officers did not find the suspect upon entering the house.

Officers had knocked on the door, but were reportedly unable to gain entry. They climbed onto a front porch roof from an adjoining house, and saw the girl's mother inside the home through a second-floor window.

The 38-year-old woman was bleeding from her face, with a large head wound, and was not moving.

Chief Inspector Scott Small told media the woman had been brutally attacked and had lost teeth. She was taken to Einstein Medical Center in critical condition. Authorities said her head injury was the result of "blunt force trauma."

Police are searching for Bailey, the suspect in the assault and beating, and describe him as black, 6 feet tall and 175 pounds.

Anyone with information on the whereabouts of Malik Bailey is asked to please contact the Special Victims Unit at 215-685-3251/52 or call 911.

OFFICIAL HOLIDAYS ADDED

City officially recognizes Islamic holidays

Two more official holidays have been added to the government and School District of Philadelphia's calendar, starting Tuesday.

Mayor Jim Kenney, Councilman Curtis Jones Jr., and School District Superintendent Dr. William Hite announced the addition of two Islamic holidays, Eid al-Fitr, celebrated after the month-long observance of Ramadan, and Eid al-Adha, celebrated at the conclusion of the annual Hajj pilgrimage, to the official holiday calendars for the school district and the city.

In January, City Council voted unanimously to adopt a resolution introduced by Jones – who is Muslim – calling for the city and the school district to recognize the Eid holidays.

In order to allow students and staff to celebrate the Eids during the 2016-2017 calendar year, district officials intend to inform students, parents and staff about the current excused-absences policy for those wishing to participate in the Eid celebrations. JENNY DEHUFF

PHA PHILADELPHIA HOUSING AUTHORITY

Sources: PPD eye old Inky building

This potential move would undo plans to relocate the PPD to West Philadelphia.

ALEXIS SACHDEV
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

The buildings PROVIDED

Several years ago, then-Mayor Michael Nutter announced plans to relocate the Philadelphia Police Department from its cramped headquarters in Chinatown to West Philly.

But according to Philadelphia magazine's sources, Mayor Jim Kenney's administration could drop those plans in favor of a move to the now-abandoned Inquirer and Daily News offices at Broad and Callowhill streets.

Nutter's $250 million plan would have relocated the PPD to 46th and Market streets in the Provident Mutual Insurance Building.

The plan was proposed in 2008, but was shelved in the recession.

The 13-acre, 325,000-square-foot property was to be renamed the Public Safety Services Campus.

Former Police Commissioner Charles H. Ramsey told the Inquirer in 2012 that the Provident building would need "a lot of work."

That said, the PPD has outgrown the Roundhouse, the concrete slab at Eighth and Race streets.

"We all know the condition of the Roundhouse," Ramsay said in 2012. "It's far too small for our needs and it's in a state of disrepair."

Mayor's statement

Kenney's spokesman, Mike Dunn, released a statement on the possible move:

"The Kenney administration is in the midst of a thorough review of plans developed by the previous administration to relocate Police Headquarters and the Medical Examiner's Office to 4601 Market Street.

This is due diligence given the scope and anticipated cost of the entire project.

In light of this review, it is incumbent on the administration to simultaneously review various options, while we also continue work at 4601 Market to move the site's improvements along. The administration is committed to choosing a site that meets the needs of the affected departments, particularly the Police Department, and that is a responsible choice for taxpayers.

With regards to 400 N. Broad Street, we have no comment."

Neither project would come cheap, though. To offset a $250-million windfall for PSSC, Nutter's administration proposed selling the Roundhouse, and the West Philadelphia morgue building and health offices at Broad and Lombard streets, both of which would also relocate to 4601 Market St.

But the former Inquirer building, at 400 N. Broad St., was purchased by developer Bart Blatstein in 2011. Blatstein declined to release the sale price, but another bidder for the property said it sold way above its $19 million asking price, the Inquirer reported.

Combative Trump details millions in aid for veterans, attacks the media

Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

The presumptive Republican nominee said he's raised $5.6 million and more's coming.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump on Tuesday detailed $5.6 million in contributions he raised for military veterans, and sharply criticized the news media for questioning him for months about what happened to the money.

At a combative news conference at Trump Tower in Manhattan, the billionaire accused the media of failing to give him credit for raising the funds at an event in January in Iowa.

Trump said the money was benefiting 41 groups. He was withering in his criticism.

"The press should be ashamed of themselves. ... You make me look very bad."
Trump told reporters gathered before him

"The press should be ashamed of themselves," Trump told reporters gathered before him. "You make me look very bad. I've never received such bad publicity for doing a good job."

He called an ABC News reporter at the event, Tom Llamas, "sleazy" and said Jim Acosta of CNN was "a real beauty."

Trump's criticism flew in the face of the hopes of some Republican leaders who want Trump to tone down his rhetoric and become more magnanimous now that he has sealed the Republican presidential nomination for the Nov. 8 election.

Trump, whose bellicose rhetoric has been a trademark of an insurgent candidacy that has upended the Republican Party, has shown no signs of doing so.

Last week, he attacked some of his former rivals for the Republican presidential nomination and a popular Latina Republican governor, Susana Martinez of New Mexico.

Trump said the coverage of his veterans group donations had been close to libelous. Asked whether he would keep his adversarial stance with reporters if elected president, Trump said: "Yeah, it's going to be like this."

Prosecutors seek testimony from Sept. 11 victims' kin in hearing

Five men face the death penalty in the case, including Pakistan-born Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, who took credit for masterminding the hijacked plane attacks in 2001.

U.S. government prosecutors asked a military judge on Tuesday to let 10 relatives of Sept. 11, 2001, victims testify in open court during a pretrial hearing at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Civilian prosecutor Edward Ryan said about 400 relatives have asked to testify. He told Judge Army Colonel James Pohl that his team would like to question the first 10 in October, many of them the elderly parents of victims.

He noted that two potential witnesses "wanted very much to testify," but have already died.

Ryan said one witness would be Lee Hanson from Easton, Connecticut. His granddaughter was the youngest victim in the attacks.

Hanson's son, Peter, was flying with his wife and 2-year-old daughter on United Airlines Flight 175 when it was hijacked and crashed into the South Tower of New York's World Trade Center.

"During the hijacking, Peter called our witness ... and described to him what was going on inside the plane," said Ryan. "That's about the only direct evidence we have from someone on Flight 175."

Defense attorneys opposed the request, saying it was inappropriate to depose the witnesses in an open hearing because the remarks could influence potential jurors.

Guantanamo Bay, Cuba GETTY IMAGES

They suggested the statements instead be videotaped and saved as potential evidence for the trial.

"What the government is asking to do is have a public exposition of the tragedy that these individuals experienced, and they're asking to do that in a way where future panel members and jurors can have exposure to it," said Cheryl Bormann, attorney for Walid bin Attash, a suspected al Qaeda training camp leader from Yemen.

There was no indication on when Pohl would rule on this motion.

Other motions scheduled for the week-long hearing at the Navy base in Cuba include requests by defense lawyers for evidence of how the five suspects were treated at secret Central Intelligence Agency prisons.

Proceedings have been plagued by repeated delays, and the case is likely years from going to trial.

Seven relatives of Sept. 11 victims are in Guantanamo Bay this week to attend the hearing. Reuters monitored the proceedings over closed-circuit television from a media center at Fort Meade, outside Washington.

The case is among a half dozen against Guantanamo inmates. There are 80 prisoners still at the Cuban base, mostly from Yemen. Almost 800 inmates have been transferred as U.S. President Barack Obama tries to fulfill his pledge to close the offshore prison before he leaves office in January. REUTERS

BRIEF

Supreme Court rejects constitutional challenge to death penalty

The Supreme Court on Tuesday refused to hear an appeal asserting that the death penalty violates the U.S. Constitution's ban on cruel and unusual punishment filed by a Louisiana man convicted of fatally shooting his pregnant former girlfriend.

Two of the eight justices, liberals Stephen Breyer and Ruth Bader Ginsburg, said they would have accepted the case, repeating concerns about the death penalty's constitutionality they raised in a different case last year.

The justices, who have sharply disagreed among themselves over capital punishment, declined to consider the appeal brought by Lamondre Tucker, who was sentenced to death for the 2008 murder of 18-year-old Tavia Sills in Shreveport. Sills, nearly five months pregnant, was shot three times and her body was dumped in a pond.

Tucker, who is black, had argued in part that black males had an increased likelihood of being convicted of murder and sentenced to death in Louisiana's Caddo Parish due to endemic racism. REUTERS

Nestle, on health kick, moves into milk-allergy testing

The Swiss group will pay DBV Technologies $111 million for rights to its skin-patch test for cow's milk protein allergy, with the balance depending on successful development, the two companies said.

KitKat chocolate wafer bars, one of many Nestle products. GETTY IMAGES

Global food giant Nestle is stepping up its push into medicine with a global deal worth up to $111 million to develop and market an experimental milk allergy test for infants.

The deal underscores Nestle's ambitions for its Health Science division, which it believes could eventually generate more than $10 billion in annual sales.

It also complements the company's market-leading infant formula business and could help lift sales of products designed for babies with food intolerance.

Nestle has signed a series of similar deals with other small companies in its bid to create a business that is midway between food and pharmaceuticals. The goal is to find new ways to treat, diagnose and prevent a range of diseases, from gastrointestinal problems to Alzheimer's.

Cow's milk protein allergies affect as many as 2 percent or 3 percent of infants and toddlers, according to the companies. Many others, however, have symptoms suggestive of the condition, creating a need for a simple diagnostic test.

Under the terms of the agreement, DBV will be eligible to receive up to $101 million in development, regulatory and commercial milestones — on top of the up front payment — and will also collect royalties on eventual product sales.

Actor Michael Jace GETTY IMAGES

Actor Michael Jace of 'The Shield' convicted of murdering his wife

Actor Michael Jace, best known for his role as a policeman on the TV drama "The Shield," was convicted by a jury Tuesday of second-degree murder for fatally shooting his wife in 2014 in front of the couple's two children at their Los Angeles home.

Jace, 53, faces a sentence of 40 years to life in prison when he is sentenced June 10.

The actor was upset that his wife, April Jace, wanted a divorce when he shot her once in the back and twice more in the legs May 19, 2014, the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office said in a statement.

He then called authorities and reported that he had shot his wife, prosecutors said. The couple's sons, ages 8 and 5 at the time, watched the killing in the family's South Los Angeles home, prosecutors said. April Jace was 40 years old when she was slain.

Prosecutors had asked jurors to find Jace guilty of first-degree murder, which involves premeditation, Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office spokesman Greg Risling said. But the jury in Los Angeles Superior Court instead found Jace guilty of second-degree murder, an intentional killing that was not premeditated.

Jace's attorneys acknowledged in court that he shot his wife.

Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, Microsoft back EU hate speech rules

Facebook, Twitter, Google's YouTube and Microsoft on Tuesday agreed to an EU code of conduct to tackle online hate speech within 24 hours in Europe.

EU governments have been trying in recent months to get social platforms to crack down on rising online racism following the refugee crisis and terror attacks, with some even threatening action against the companies.

As part of the pledge agreed with the European Commission, the web giants will review the majority of valid requests for removal of illegal hate speech in less than 24 hours and remove or disable access to the content if necessary.

They will also strengthen their cooperation with civil society organizations who help flag hateful content when it goes online and promote "counter-narratives" to hate speech.

"The recent terror attacks have reminded us of the urgent need to address illegal online hate speech. Social media is unfortunately one of the tools that terrorist groups use to radicalize young people," EU Justice Commissioner Vera Jourova said.

Germany got Google, Facebook and Twitter to agree to delete hate speech from their websites within 24 hours last year and even launched an investigation into the European head of Facebook over its alleged failure to remove racist hate speech.

"There's no place for hate speech on Facebook," said Monika Bickert, head of global policy management at Facebook.

"With a global community of 1.6 billion people, we work hard to balance giving people the power to express themselves whilst ensuring we provide a respectful environment."

Facebook GETTY IMAGES

"This a historic agreement that could not arrive at a better time."

Moshe Kantor, president of the European Jewish Congress.

The code of conduct is largely a continuation of efforts that the companies already take to counter hate speech on their websites, such as developing tools for people to report hateful content and training staff to handle such requests.

Twitter has suspended over 125,000 accounts since the middle of 2015 for threatening or promoting terror acts, primarily related to Islamic State.

The United States has undertaken similar efforts to entice the cooperation of tech companies in combating online radicalization, focusing on promoting "counter-narratives" to extremist content.

EU ministers had called for cooperation with tech companies to be stepped up after the Brussels attacks in March. Jewish lobbyists, frequently the target of hate speech, welcomed the code of conduct.

Depp-Heard divorce drama heats up

The drama of Johnny Depp and Amber Heard's divorce continues to escalate as her claims that the actor repeatedly physically and verbally abused her multiple times during their 15-month marriage come to light.

Meanwhile, Depp's family and friends have come forward to defend the "Through the Looking Glass" star over the weekend. Daughter Lily Rose Depp spoke out on Instagram, writing: "My dad is the sweetest, most loving person I know, he's been nothing but a wonderful father to my little brother and I, and everyone who knows him would say the same," alongside a childhood photo. While ex-long-term partner Vanessa Paradis called Heard's accusations "outrageous" in a handwritten letter to TMZ, adding that he never physically abused her in the duration of their 14-year relationship.

The most damning, however, comes from Depp's friend Doug Stanhope, who penned a guest column for The Wrap titled "Johnny Depp Is Being Blackmailed By Amber Heard — Here's How I Know." We'll let you guess what that one's about.

Heard is seeking spousal support (her initial $50,000 a month request was denied — as was her request for Depp to attend mandatory anger management classes) and both are due in court June 17.

So maybe Kit Harington isn't a men's rights activist?

This weekend Jon Snow went to the dark side — or so it seemed. Speaking to The Sunday Times Magazine, Kit Harington piped up about how hard it is to have a Y chromosome, saying things like, "There's a sexism that happens towards men." This stray bit was fed to the internet, which was quick to deem the studly bro as a men's rights activist. But then a few places, like Jezebel, took the time to read the full quote. Turns out he was making a nuanced argument. "I'd like to think of myself as more than a head of hair or a set of looks," the "Game of Thrones" hunk said. "In some ways you could argue I've been employed for a look I have. … At some points during photo shoots when I'm asked to strip down, I felt that. If I felt I was being employed just for my looks, I'd stop acting." Fair enough, and we can sympathize, especially since he took the time to balance it out: "There's definitely a sexism in our industry that happens towards women, and there is towards men as well." We can all be objectified, just as we can all rush to judgment over out-of-context quotes, especially when the person saying them is as dashing as Kit Harington. But there we go again.

'The Hills' to return to MTV for 10th anniversary special

Traditionally, celebrating a 10th anniversary means getting your loved one a tin present. But to celebrate the 10th anniversary of "The Hills," MTV is giving its audience something even better: a one-off anniversary special airing Aug. 2.

Earlier this week, former "Hills" star Lauren Conrad announced she would be returning to the small screen to commemorate the show's anniversary. During the special, titled "The Hills: That Was Then, This Is Now," Conrad will answer fan questions, look back on her life and dish about "some of the show's best-kept secrets," according to MTV News.

No word yet on whether Conrad's former cast members will be joining for the special. But if we had our way, we'd make #WeWantSpeidi a trending hashtag if it meant MTV would bring them on board for one last "YOU KNOW WHAT YOU DID" blowout.

Christine and the Queens' French language "Chaleur Humaine" made its way to the States last year. GETTY IMAGES

Christine and the Queens is your newest French obsession.

LINDA LABAN
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

So our big question is: Has Heloise Letissier called Elton John back yet?

Last month, Sir Elton called the singer, who is best known for leading Christine and the Queens, and he got her voice mail. Surprisingly, she didn't return his call, and in fact, still hasn't. What?

"I'm really shy and phoning someone sometimes makes me panic," says Letissier, speaking from Paris a couple of weeks before returning to the U.S. for another touring bout. "The phone is weird. You can't see people's faces and you're just talking to them. It makes me anxious." But it's all good with Sir Elton: "I met him recently and apologized and explained about that, and he hugged me. I was blushing so hard, it was crazy. But he gave me a big hug, so I think he understood."

Her fetching performances find the 27-year-old drawing from Michael Jackson's signature moves and pairing them with vogueing, a la '80s Madonna. But it's Letissier's electro-indie debut album — "Chaleur Humaine," which translates as "human warmth" — that's causing a stir on the pop scene. The record was only released outside France last year after Letissier rerecorded a self-titled version with English-language tracks, allowing new fans into her imaginative musical world.

She found her name and her game in London around 2010 after visiting the Soho nightclub Madame Jojo's, which was known for its fabulous trans cabaret and sadly closed in 2014 in a gentrification hustle. It was the bravura of the performers at the club that inspired Letissier: Hence, the "Queens" were born. But she already had Christine on her side a long time before that.

"I was using the name before in various incarnations since I was a kid," says the Nantes native. "My friends and family got used to me talking about Christine. People would joke, 'How's Christine today?' It's a stage character not belonging to me. Being free of myself, not belonging to anyone was important."

Letissier just scored huge kudos with a knockout performance at Coachella, after which Frank Ocean sought her out backstage. Katy Perry, Sufjan Stevens and the mother of modern dance pop, Madonna, have all given her props recently.

"I don't think about too much," says Letissier of the big-name attention. "This is all happening with my first album, I'm still a baby. The task is not done, it's just the beginning of something."

Strip club comedy in South Philly

You won't find this show in your routine stand-up joint

MIKE FENN
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Stand-up comedy is always a fun experience, and you can usually expect to hear some R-rated material from your favorite comic. So why not perform that material an adult setting?

Enter "Comedy for Gentlemen" — a relatively new offering in the Philly comedy scene that will begin its monthly series Friday, June 3 at 10 p.m.

But instead of a comedy club, the show takes place at a far more unique location: the Republican Club, an adult entertainment establishment on Snyder Avenue in South Philly.

The creator and host of "Comedy for Gentlemen," Rachel Fogletto, is no stranger to performing comedy in unusual locations. In her four years of doing stand-up comedy in the Philadelphia area, she's performed everywhere from barbecue joints to a room above an ice cream parlor.

"The Republican is a great and popular hangout spot as it is, and the venue is very supportive," says Fogletto. "It's an intimate environment with an incredibly social staff who will make you feel like you're hanging out with all your friends, and oh yeah, there's a great show happening too."

The June 3 show will feature some of the area's top comedians, including Rubi Nicholas (winner of Nickelodeon's "Funniest Mom" contest), Keane Cobb, Mike Alloy, Sonia Zambrana and Chris Wood. Each of these comedians has worked with Fogletto on past shows, including Funny Females, an all-woman show at Ray's Happy Birthday Bar in South Philly, and

GETTY IMAGES

Rachel Fogletto, host and founder of "Comedy for Gentlemen." PROVIDED

Comedy-Gasm, which recently completed a three-year run at the Irish Pol in Old City.

"Rachel has put on great shows in Philly for years now," says Wood. "She's crazy professional and knows how to create a fun night for an audience in any venue."

"Tits and jokes. Who wouldn't want to go to this?!" exclaims Zambrana.

Zambrana has a point: A comedy show in a gentlemen's club is going to offer its audiences more than just drink specials. Once the comedians have finished their sets, patrons can expect to see live go-go dancing as an encore.

"The dancing is a really cool addition to a comedy show; it is truly a night of talent, variety and fun all around," says Fogletto. "Dancers and comedians have a ton in common, mostly that we're entertainers who are often misunderstood in some way, and in actuality, we are the coolest."

The Republican Club is located at 1734 Snyder Avenue. Admission to the show is $5 and guests must be 21 or over. Doors open at 9:30 p.m. and the show will kick off at 10 p.m.

Ethan Hawke wants more women filmmakers

The actor talks Rebecca Miller's comedy "Maggie's Plan" and expanding his horizons.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Ethan Hawke has been acting for over three decades, but "Maggie's Plan" was his first time being directed by a woman. Even he's amazed by that. In the comedy, by Rebecca Miller ("Personal Velocity"), the actor plays an academic who leaves his wife/colleague, Georgette (Julianne Moore), for Greta Gerwig's Maggie, a younger woman who eventually realizes she might have made a mistake. It gave him the chance to both explore things he knew well — being a dad who lives in New York City — and see new sides of himself.

This is a comedy that's very casual about presenting how today is lived: how we can fall in and out of love, how couples can split and still keep in contact, how their kids won't be destroyed by divorce. Yet it's still a comedy.

A lot of the comedies I grew up loving are comedies with great performances that are rooted in recognizable human behavior. One of the things that's happened is comedy has largely been reoriented towards a 14-year-old male psyche. I laugh at them, too. But if you look at these great Katharine Hepburn or Preston Sturges comedies, they're really smart. To read a scene where a New Yorker is driving with their stepkids and is worried about where they're going to park — that's a movie I want to see. The people in this movie are all likeable and screwed-up, like everyone I know. We're all trying to get through life. And it's hard because you screw up all the time, and you screw up with good intentions.

You also don't see many movies about colleagues in a very specific profession — here a particular wing of academia — in relationships.

It's surprising how rarely we see that in movies. So many of us are colleagues with the people we partner with, in some way, shape or form. This is one of the most surprising things to me about being an adult: I didn't know that school was the only time I was going to spend really engaged with people who are interested in different things than me. My whole adult life I've spent with people who are interested in the arts. I see it with my kids in school. I really want them to enjoy these friendships, because you'll never be friends with people like that for the rest of your life. Not to say you shouldn't be, but we all break off into camps. What's great about John and Georgette's relationship is that's how people partner off all the time.

It's refreshing that in the last year there's been a concerted effort to get more women directing films, to have more chances to get different viewpoints into the market place.

I think about it completely from a selfish point of view: that it's in my best interest [to be directed by women]. I've been acting for a long time, and acting for Rebecca was different than acting for a man my age. I need to put myself in a position to be viewed differently. Then, by accident, things start to change. My world is opening up and I'm allowed to be different, to show different sides of me. We collaborate with people who are different from us. It's in our best interest. It gets you out of your habitual behavior that you didn't even know you had.

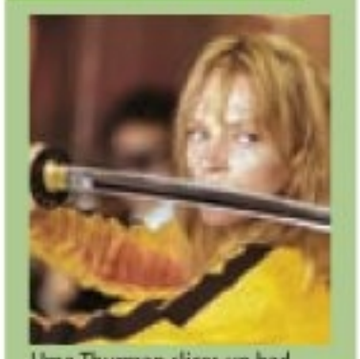
"SIXTEEN CANDLES"

Molly Ringwald and Michael Schoeffling in "Sixteen Candles" UNIVERSAL PICTURES

A rom-com featuring an offensive Asian stereotype and made by a noted right-winger — why is this a classic again? Oh, yeah, because of the rest of it. John Hughes' first teen movie emerged at the height of the slasher genre, when the young and pretty were mostly on screens to be hacked up. It was a breath of fresh air — a movie that really understood teens, and even had some formal chops to boot. And unlike "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," it doesn't feature a hero who — as critic David Denby noted, with frightening prescience, back in 1986 — comes off like a young George W. Bush.

"KILL BILL, VOLS. 1 & 2"



Uma Thurman slices up bad guys in "Kill Bill." NETFLIX

Quentin Tarantino is in a dark place right now, even for a guy synonymous with ultraviolence and naughty language. If the wildly cynical "The Hateful Eight" was too rich for your blood, you can journey back to a nicer time: you know, when he made an extravaganza of vengeance, coated in geysers of blood. Tarantino wanted viewers to watch Uma Thurman plow through minions and bosses on the big screen, but its two-part split makes it ideal for binge-watching. Too bad the stitched-together cut — even longer and with a slightly different structure — has never materialized on home video. You still have to leave the house to see it, on the off-chance some rep theater shows it.

Guys can like Jane Austen too

Whit Stillman doesn't want only women to see his new costume comedy "Love & Friendship."

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

This is a busy time for Whit Stillman. He has an Amazon show, "The Cosmopolitans," in the works. His first three movies — "Metropolitan," "Barcelona" and "The Last Days of Disco" — are now out on Criterion home video. And he's got "Love & Friendship," in which a filmmaker in love with droll dialogue and lovelorn bourgeoisie characters finally gets to do a Jane Austen movie. Greatly expanding upon the early novella "Lady Susan," it stars Kate Beckinsale as a 30-something widow scheming for a new husband.

You actually had to invent your own dialogue. How on earth do you write Austenese?

We considered ["Lady Susan"] an incomplete, flawed work. But within it are among her best writing. There's beautiful sentences, beautiful paragraphs that are very humorous. Wherever possible, if it worked as dialogue it would be in our movie. And the other stuff tends to be invented. She describes Lady Susan romancing and emotionally seducing [a younger character]. They're having all these talks and conversations. I had to write the meat of that. That is new. Then a lot of the stuff with Sir James Martin is new. There's one letter from Catherine Vernon where she described how absurd he was but doesn't say what he was saying.

Kate Beckinsale reunites with Whit Stillman, her "The Last Days of Disco" director, for "Love & Friendship," a Jane Austen adaptation in which she plays a scheming widow out for a new husband. ROADSIDE ATTRACTIONS

He's a good over-the-top character. There's a long, very funny bit where he won't shut up about thinking the name "Churchill" is two words: "church" and "hill."

It's a really long scene and I know the material's really weak. But it's [Tom Bennett's] performance making it good and funny. We thought it went on too long. We tried to cut out the repetition. Then we left it in, and we saw that it really played. It's good that it's so long. It would have been a mistake to chop it shorter.

This also doesn't have a lot of the stuff you see in Jane Austen cinema. There's no proposal scene, no moony declarations of love, no men emerging from lakes.

It's just that I hate so much all that stuff. There was no way in heck it was going to enter into our film. We were not going to have pandering. But on the other hand, we're respecting certain bases. So there's going to be a wedding scene. There's going to be young lovers, and old lovers. Things like that. No pandering was the model for our film.

It's not being entirely sold as an Austen movie.

I was sad that the British distributor chose to do an initial ad campaign that was all pander. If you say, "Well, I'm going to sell this film as a super-romantic period film," that means the people who might not like our sketch comedy [version] are not going to come. If you make it seem super-Barbie doll feminine, "Let's dress up a doll in 18th century clothes," then guys aren't going to go. Except the guys who are interested in dolls' clothes.

The AKA Rittenhouse Square is now available for nightly stays

The preferred Philly hideaway for the rich and famous expands beyond extended stays.

JENNIFER LOGUE

Bedroom interior HALKIN MASON PHOTOGRAPHY

AKA Rittenhouse Square exterior HALKIN ARCHITECTURAL PHOTOGRAPHY LLC

What do movie stars like Richard Gere, Miley Cyrus and Jennifer Lawrence have in common aside from being super famous? They've all stayed at the AKA Rittenhouse Square, and now you can, too. The luxury extended stay residential property, that has been a home-away-from-home for celebrities visiting Philadelphia, is now opening its doors for nightly stays in one of its 78 suites.

So why the sudden change? Philly's surge in tourism in recent years — with over 3.1 million overnight hotel stays in 2014 — played a major part as well as the closing of the Four Seasons Hotel.

Larry Korman, president of AKA, comments: "Our hometown city of Philadelphia is more vibrant than ever before, and with so much exciting growth we feel it is the perfect time to enhance our offerings to accommodate all visitors' unique desires."

Besides possibly bumping into someone famous in the elevators, visitors will love everything AKA Rittenhouse has to offer. For starters, the location can't be beat — looking over the 7-acre Rittenhouse Square Park as well as the hustle and bustle of Walnut Street — home to some of the best dining and retail options in the city.

As far as the property itself, recent renovations include a redesign of all suites by Edward Asfour and Nicholas Cardone, for a more modern feel. From wire-brushed hardwood floors to custom upholstered furniture to Apple TVs, a sense of newness is in the air of this historic building.

Other conveniences include in-suite dining from the award-winning a.bar and a.kitchen; a gym with equipment supplied by high end manufacturer, Technogym; a full service business center with a conference room; same day dry-cleaning and laundry service; a dedicated doorman and resident services team; and a 24-hour front desk.

"Some guests want the self-sufficiency of a residence over a room even when staying for a shorter period — a full kitchen, a separate living room and private staff," Korman says.

So what's next for AKA Rittenhouse? A rooftop terrace in addition to a screening room and cinema in the near future, according to Korman.

With so much love coming from its Hollywood clientele, it's no wonder AKA continues to roll out the red carpet with their offerings. Richard Gere has described the suites as "very open" and "inspiring" while Jennifer Lawrence exuberantly expressed "being a big fan" of AKA.

"Philly is a great city to film in," Korman says. "David O'Russell and his team all wanted to return for another movie here."

AKA Rittenhouse Square is located at 135 S. 18th St.

Slumping Phillies are desperate for offense

The Phillies have fallen back to earth, thanks to their lackluster bats.

KYLE PHILLIPPI
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

Ryan Howard is not the only Phillies hitter struggling at the plate. GETTY IMAGES

Pete Mackanin walked out from his office and up onto the podium after the Phillies 4-3 loss to the Washington Nationals on Monday.

He sat down and summed up an ailing problem as best as he could.

"We're starving for offense," he said.

That's as accurate of a statement as one can make when describing the Phillies lack of scoring. It's been an increasingly evident problem ever since they scored two or fewer runs in four of their first five games this season.

This past stretch, though, has really cast a spotlight on their ineptitude. The Phillies were on the brink of being in first place in the division not that long ago. Since inching into a tie with Washington, they've plummeted thanks to a 2-8 stretch since the Atlanta series.

During this slide, the Phillies are averaging 2.7 runs per game. Take away their two wins, which saw them put up 13 runs in two games, and that average sinks to 1.7 in their last eight losses.

"We need more offense," Mackanin said. "Once again, another one-run game."

The question now becomes whether or not the cure to this problem is on the roster.

The team's top hitter, Odubel Herrera, is doing his part with a .319 average entering Tuesday. After that, the next everyday starter behind him is Freddy Galvis with a .257 average. That's followed by Cesar Hernandez and Maikel Franco at .255 and .253, respectively.

Right now, Galvis is hitting at a better clip than his career average of .244. Hernandez is about 10 points shy of where he regularly hits. Franco is the one who should turn around the most being he's nowhere near his .280 figure from last year.

That being said, though, the individual players in this lineup aren't going to dramatically improve because, as history shows, they're right around where they should be from an average standpoint. Sure, the RBI totals need to improve. There's only one player with over 20 RBI sthis season.

Outside of Franco and Herrera, there's not much pop to the lineup. Ryan Howard is a shell of a shell of his former self. He's fallen off a cliff with his average in the .150 territory. A turnaround doesn't seem to be in the books.

There's hope Tommy Joseph can bring some power into the lineup. So far, he's been a nice addition with three home runs and a .278 average in 12 games. As long as Howard blocks him from being an everyday player, however, there's only so much he bring to the lineup.

The Phillies start to the season was all because of their pitching and defense with the hope that the offense can only go up from there.

So far, there's still that same optimism … but it's waning with each loss now.

Nelson Agholor had one touchdown catch in 2015. GETTY IMAGES

Eagles' Agholor thinks talk is cheap, wants to be better in Year 2

Jordan Matthews just talks sometimes.

And when he told reporters that his teammate Nelson Agholor bought his own JUGS machine (a machine that throws balls that wide receivers train with in practice), Agholor got a little bashful.

"The reason why I don't talk about my stuff is because it needs to be seen at the end of the day," Agholor, Philly's 2015 first-round pick, said. "For me, I've been using a JUGS machine all my life. I still use it at the facility and I use it at home."

Agholor doesn't want to get into specifics. He wants to perform well on the field. That's why the receiver, who caught just 23 passes for 253 yards last year, is putting his head down and going to work. He wants to be much, much better in 2016.

"I did not take advantage of a great opportunity but that's what I must do this year," Agholor said. "I am still in a position to take advantage of a great opportunity and that's what I will do."

In an age where rookie receivers are expected to surpass 1,000 yards right out of college, Agholor took a step back in 2015.

"I study past receivers how they did in their first year," Agholor said, with a smile and seeming relaxed at his locker after OTAs Tuesday. "Reggie Wayne, Larry Fitzgerald, they accepted a challenge and they got better. Reggie got better in Year 2. I've all about those guys. Demarius Thomas and those types of people, they all got better in Year 2, that's what I have to do." EVAN MACY

Thon Maker could be a late-first-round sleeper to whomever selects him. GETTY IMAGES

What should Sixers do with their 24th, 26th draft picks?

For obvious reasons, the 76ers have been rejoicing since the ping-pong balls finally bounced their way at the NBA lottery.

The result landed the Sixers the coveted No. 1 overall pick in the June 23 NBA draft.

Lost in the shuffle is this: The Sixers also own the Nos. 24 and 26 selections thanks to previous trades with the Miami Heat and Oklahoma City Thunder. Former general manager Sam Hinkie was heavily criticized for tanking three seasons, but now look at some of these assets coming their way.

These picks aren't as sexy, yet the Sixers could come away with a couple more solid players who could contribute right away. There's no guarantee they will keep both picks. They could package these two picks and move up in the first round. They could trade for future considerations. Options are available for the Sixers and that's what they desperately need after compiling 47 victories over the past three seasons.

Here are five solid options for the Sixers:

1 Tyler Ulis, guard, Kentucky

This kid can flat-out play and he proved it at a high level with the Wildcats. Ulis averaged 17.3 points and 7.0 assists per game while running the high-powered Kentucky offense. His basketball IQ is quite high and just watching him, you can tell he gets it all. Ulis would fit in immediately with this young Sixers team.

2 Brice Johnson, forward North Carolina

He was a double-double machine for the Tar Heels. The whole world saw how good Johnson was through the NCAA Tournament and in the championship game loss to Villanova. With 17.0 points and 10.5 rebounds per game, Johnson was a major factor every night for UNC. His skills will definitely translate to the next level in the NBA. Don't rule out Johnson if he's on the board. He would make an immediate impact.

3 Juan Hernangomez, forward, Spain

This 20-year-old forward has risen up the draft charts with an all-around game. He can shoot, can post up, runs the court well and plays strong defense. He's still improving in all aspects. If Dario Saric comes over and plays for the Sixers, it's possible that Hernangomez could stay overseas for a season or two. Not a bad idea.

4 DeAndre Bembry, forward, St. Joseph's

The nation caught glimpses of what we knew here in Philadelphia all this time: Bembry was an ultra-talented player right here at Saint Joseph's. While not heavily recruited by the power conferences, Bembry continually improved and his play in the NCAA Tournament couldn't be ignored. This kid is a legitimate first round pick. He can score, rebound and pass and he does it all somewhat effortlessly at times.

5 Thon Maker, high school senior

Another big man? Maker must be considered because of his 7-foot-1 frame and untapped potential. Maker could turn into Hakeem Olajuwon. He could also turn into Hasheem Thabeet. No one knows. With two late-first-round picks, it could be worth a gamble. The Sixers are big already across the front line, but trades could take place. Maker is a wild card worth looking at seriously.

IS ACNE HOLDING YOU BACK?

A clinical study, sponsored by Novan, is currently underway to evaluate an investigational medication for acne vulgaris on the face. Acne vulgaris is a common skin condition that consists of blackheads, whiteheads, pimples and sometimes deeper lumps called nodules or cysts. The study will last approximately 3 months. You may be a candidate for this study if you:

- Are a healthy male or female 9 years of age and older
- Have moderate to severe facial acne
- Have at least 20 pimples
- Are available for up to 6 visits to the research clinic
- Are willing to apply investigational medication or placebo for 12 weeks
- Are willing to not use any other acne treatment during the study.

Additional entry criteria apply. Qualified participants will receive related medical examinations and study medication at no cost, and may be eligible for compensation for their time and travel.

For additional information regarding this study:

Aries Get a strong handle on your personal finances and investments that will help you get ahead over time. Romance will drive you to do your best.

Taurus Look for an event that will help you mingle. The people you encounter when you participate in your community, after-hours networking events will lead to opportunities.

Gemini Check out what everyone else is doing and put your time and effort behind the project that looks most appealing. Don't feel guilty if your choice happens to involve self-adornment.

Cancer Keep your secrets to yourself and your emotions tucked away someplace safe. Check into different ways to spice up your life and leisure time.

Leo If you take the initiative, you'll capture attention. Your personality will convince others to do things your way. Don't put pressure on anyone when you can just be yourself.

Virgo Check out vacation spots or get involved in an event that will help you grow mentally, spiritually or emotionally. A change in your personality will bring about positive alterations.

Libra Keep moving forward. Initiate an emotional interaction with someone you love. Tend to desired personal improvements and choose a path that excites and inspires you.

Scorpio The detail work and special touches you put into everything you do will separate you from the crowd. Step things up a notch and present and market what you have to offer.

Sagittarius Adventure will beckon you, but do your research before you jump into something that you know little about. Knowledge can help prevent a mishap.

Capricorn Don't worry about what everyone else does. If you live by your standards, you will continue to do well. Success doesn't happen when you are negative.

Aquarius Set your sights on what interests you the most. If you share your feelings, you can bring about a positive change in an important relationship and stabilize your home life as well.

Pisces Do your best to stay focused. Let experience guide you. Don't let anyone push you around. Use your intelligence and knowledge and do things your way. EUGENIA LAST
